The Penny Saved:

Under the new regime when little Willie or little Susan receive a penny for running down to the corner grocery on an errand for mama, or a nickel for not teasing for cake, and jam for a whole week, what will they do? Quite obviously, you answer, they will run down to the corner candy store or to the moving picture place on the next street and exchange the penny or nickel for some of the joys of living.

A penny, you say, to a child means its exchange value in immediate pleasure. A penny is to a child the equivalent of one lemon stick, a package of gum, a marble, or something to be eaten or played with at once.

All very well is your theory for the child of yesterday but now, so a bulletin recently issued by the board of education tells us, school children are learning to save. They have already saved a million and a quarter dollars, which is a pretty large amount when you stop to realize that most of it comes to them in pennies, and when you consider that each one of those pennies is a lemon stick, or a marble or a piece of gum forewarn.

This work of stimulating interest in saving is carried on in various ways by the different public schools throughout the country where the system has been adopted. Usually the school savings bank, with officers chosen from among the children themselves, keeps the child's savings till it amounts to a dollar. Then the child is given a bank book. When the deposit amounts to $3 or $5 it draws interest of 3 or more per cent. There must always be co-operation with a local bank in order to make the system effective, but once established the enthusiasm with which it is met by the children is really amazing.

Few children are gifted with a very strong instinct for saving. The child's imagination is vivid, but his experience and observation are too limited for him to be able to figure to himself the value of money saved. The child always lives in the present. His immediate desires are always of paramount importance.

It is not because of any natural thrift that this saving system in the schools has been possible, but because to the child the whole thing is like a new and interesting game. Later, as he grows older, of course, he has acquired the habit of saving.

In the District the system of school savings banks has been especially successful. It has been established here for several years and, fortunately, is in a flourishing condition at the present time. Let's hope that the school children's savings banks will have a long and successful record in this country.

HOROSCOPE.

"The stars incline, but do not compel." Friday, January 29, 1915.

Astrologers find that the stars are not strong in their special direction today, which should be fairly favorable, since there is only a mildly adverse aspect, due to the position of Jupiter.

Under this configuration it is wise to avoid law and dealings with lawyers, judges, and men who have power to make decisions concerning the tenure of property.

It is not a fortunate rule for brokers, speculators, stock-operators, and woolen merchants.

There is a sign interpreted as sinister for charitable enterprises. Revelations concerning the misappropriation of money intended to relieve distress are predicted. Losses through misplaced confidence are forewarned. These will be reported from the West as well as the East. The government of the planets is believed to increase tendencies toward dishonesty, and during this year crimes caused by the temptation to obtain money will multiply.

As Jupiter is held to have dominion over the blood, liver, veins, and arteries, there is not a favorable influence for maladies such as apoplexy, heart disease, and rheumatism. Deaths of elderly persons will be numerous in the next two months and several distinguished men will die.

Peace negotiations that will be misapprehended are forewarned. The President will have a serious problem to solve, but he will win approbation.

Colony schemes of far-reaching scope are prognosticated. These will attract worldwide attention, the seeds declare. In the spring epidemics are probable in this country, as well as in Europe. Discontent and stirring among the working classes are likely to be prevalent. Socialism will make great gains.

Theaters have an ill omen after February, which will not be a good month, although a few plays will be extraordinarily successful.

Persons whose birthdate it is are warned to keep a close watch of their money, but they lose it. They have the augury of business anxiety during the coming year.

Children born on this day have good stars to guide them. They are likely to be generous to excess. Their ability to keep out of trouble depends on the hour of birth.

URGES STATE SUFFRAGE.

Mrs. Frank Asked New Hampshire Legislators to Grant Vote.

Mrs. Antoinette Funk returned yesterday from Concord, N. H., where she made two addresses before the New Hampshire legislature. On Wednesday she spoke at a regular session of the House. On Tuesday evening she addressed a joint session of the legislature.

Mrs. Funk's visit to New Hampshire was made for the purpose of urging support for a bill granting Presidential suffrage to New Hampshire women, which was introduced in the legislature on the day of her arrival. The bill provides for the extension of such suffrage as can be granted by legislative enactment without an amendment to the State constitution. This is similar to the bill which passed the Illinois legislature in 1913 and has been introduced this year in several States.

Smart Costumes in Effective Designs

Republished by Special Arrangement with Harper's Bazar.

WIDE as skirt and short as to jacket, is this dressy street costume, fashioned from putty-colored grosgrain cloth, the trimmings being of black satin embroidered in gold. Blue and white chrysanthemums decorate the hat.

RED embroidery on the saucy little jacket of this youthful suit, exploited in black and white check Country Club suiting, is a new note. A fantasy of straw-colored chiffon trims the hat.

HOUSE-WIVES DAILY ECONOMY CALENDAR

FRESH FRUIT IN WINTER.

Fresh fruit is at all times of the year one of the most valuable elements in our diet. And in winter, when fresh fruit is especially difficult to obtain, it should be most energetically sought after.

Oranges, grapefruit, apples, bananas, and hard grapes—Tokay, Malaga, or one of the rarer sorts—are about the only sorts of fruits that are available for several months in most of our winter localities.

And, unfortunately, even these fruits are sometimes quite expensive.

The best thing to do is to serve most lavishly whatever fruit is at the moment least expensive. If you are fortunate enough to buy a barrel of good apples, use them generously so that you will be sure to use them all before they spoil.

If you buy a crate of oranges at a low price devise ways of serving oranges so that they can be counted among your usual desserts. When bananas are selling for a song, invest heavily in them.

With bananas you can do many things. There are sliced bananas, served for dessert, with cream and sugar. There is banana salad, made of halved or quartered bananas rolled in ground walnuts or peanuts, and served with French dressing on lettuce leaves. There are baked bananas.

There are oranges, there is orange jelly. There are sliced oranges, sprinkled with sugar and chilled before serving. There are oranges diced and sweetened and served in the center of a sponge cake, with whipped cream on top.

Grapefruit can be served in their skins or diced in glasses. Grapefruit juice, too, can be substituted for orange juice in jelly.

Grapes can be seeded and skinned and put in jelly of any sort, and in their natural state, washed well and chilled, they are delicious for dessert. They can be separated from the stem, and each grape popped into soft frosting, and then carefully dried, and prepared in this way they make a delicious sweet.

All these fruits can be mixed in the form of fruit cocktails, and varied by the addition of different flavorings, or different proportions, they are a never-failing source of delicious desserts. Grapefruit and orange, in equal proportion, sweetened and flavored with sherry, port, or the juice from maraschino cherries; orange and banana, sweetened, or orange, banana, and grapefruit halved and seeded grapes added to orange and grapefruit pulp—all these combinations are good. And the addition of a little canned pineapple or canned cherries to any of them makes a welcome variation.

IN PLACE OF HOT CAKE.

The fruit fritter is a good substitute for hot cakes. To make it add any fruit, canned or fresh, to a good fritter batter. If canned fruit is used drain the fruit before adding it to the batter, and either use the syrup for the liquid needed in the batter or else save it to serve with the fritters. Canned berries of any sort or cherries are good in fritters. If canned peaches or any larger fruit is used the fruit must be cut into suitable pieces before added to the batter.

LITTLE CHANGE IN FOOD PRICES

Bad Weather Has Little Effect on Cost of Eggs.

VEGETABLES PLENTIFUL

Quotations on Meats Remain at About Level of a Week Ago.

Market quotations during the past week generally were firm, even egg prices remaining steady in spite of heavy and cloudy weather. Best henry products are quoted at 45 and 50 cents a dozen, with gradations down to 30 and 35 cents for Southern, Western, and storage cases. Meat figures show little change. Salted killings are in good demand, butchers say, although the prices are the same. Good pork shoulders are retailing at 12 to 15 cents a pound, fresh stock, pork hams, at 14 to 15 cents and chops from 15 to 18 cents. Bacon is sold at 18 and 20 cents, in the piece, and 22 to 25 cents for the sliced. Beef steaks are quoted at from 15 cents to 20 cents. Mutton stewing meats are quoted at from 10 to 15 cents.

The best grade of creamery butter is selling at 45 cents a pound, medium grades at 40 to 45 cents; renovated, 30 cents, and oleo at 18 to 20 cents a pound.

Prices of sea foods fluctuated during the week. The receipts of perch were small, some dealers not even handling them. The quotation, however, remained the same at 12 to 15 cents a pound.
